11:04 Sound Opinions Presents: 1967 - Rock and Roll Comes of Age

1967 was the year that the recording studio as an instrument changed the way music is created; that the album as a united concept changed the way it is heard; that the festival experience remade the way music is celebrated live. Pop music became big business. If rock and roll was born in the 1950s, then by 1967 - for better or worse - it had grown up. Explore landmark releases by The Beatles, Pink Floyd, Love and the Velvet Underground. Out went the teen-driven single ... in came the album as art. They also look back at the historic Monterey International Pop Festival - a coming out party for Janis Joplin, Jimi Hendrix and Otis Redding that said to the world "rock and roll is here to stay". Guests include Elektra Records founder Jac Holzman, British invasion producer Joe Boyd and Monterey historian Harvey Kubernick (PRX)

Looking at the impact of electricity on music: The Digital Democracy of Sound
Digital technology has changed how we find, how we make and how we listen to music. Sometimes it's easier to get a hold of your favourite track than it is to get a good cup of coffee. Sounds are sampled, mixed and shared on a scale that eclipses our wildest dreams from even a decade ago. This has created wonderful and terrible consequences, opening the door to pirates but also to a new world of music - the fourth world, where anything is possible (F, CBC)
