The little town of Waihi has two little WW1 mysteries, both involving honours boards. The Waihi Museum has just been gifted one board which used to hang in the town's Methodist church but hadn't been seen since the church closed in the early 1990's. Word is that it was found recently at a tip and has been restored by persons unknown. The museum's also trying to track down an honours board that used to hang in the town's King's Theatre. Apparently it listed former pupils from the Waihi District High School who enlisted to fight in the War to End All Wars. That's now nowhere to be found and nobody seems to know anything about it (RNZ)

Laboratory research on chimpanzees is banned in most of the world, though the US, along with Gabon, still allows it. Hear a discussion on whether animals, including primates, should be used for research, and whether they are entitled to "rights" - or just "humane treatment". The debate is chaired by Owen Bennett Jones and includes the leading philosopher opponent to the concept of animal rights Professor Carl Cohen, as well as a distinguished philosopher Colin McGinn, a lawyer and a leading animal rights advocate Steven Wise, a neurobiologist Sir Colin Blakemore and someone who grew up with Nim Chimsky - a New York resident Jenny Lee. ### 11:06 The Byrds: There is a Season

The Byrds, covering 1964 to 1967: The all-too-brief hit making years of the band's original five members - Roger McGuinn, David Crosby, Chris Hillman, Gene Clark and Michael Clarke. They were an electrified folk band who topped the charts with some of the decade's most innovative singles and albums. By 1967 their musical harmony was engulfed by the off-stage disharmony that pushed them to reach those heights (1 of 2)
