5:11 Heart and Soul

Me and My Turban

The turban is probably the most obvious thing that identifies a Sikh. After a 1699 edict in 1699 requiring Sikhs not to cut their hair, the turban, part of the Bana or military uniform at that time, was used to keep and protect a Sikh's hair, and in line with its military tradition, it is something that has always been a masculine symbol worn almost exclusively by men and not women. That is until now it seems. This week's edition of Heart and Soul hears from some of the growing number of Sikh women who are wearing Turbans.(BBC) (BBC)

10:15 Are we Fighting Cancer the Right Way?

The World Health Organisation says the number of cancer cases will rise by 70% over the next 20 years. A huge amount of effort and money is spent fighting the disease. But are we getting that fight right? In this special hour-long edition of The Inquiry four expert witnesses tell us new ideas are being stifled, that there is not enough money being spent on drugs to treat early-stage cancer and that we are not doing enough to stop people from getting cancer in the first place. The Inquiry puts that evidence to someone in a position to do something about it - Dr Francis Collins, director of the US National Institutes of Health, the world's largest biomedical research agency, with a budget of $32 billion. From the BBC World Service Series: The Inquiry
