Imams in the Vatican

Some of the brightest and best students of Islam in Britain round off their education at the Cambridge Muslim College, which aims to train the next generation of British Muslim leaders. Towards the end of their course, the students (some of them trainee imams) step out of their Islamic comfort zone to experience something which is quite new to most; they immerse themselves in the faith and culture of the world's largest Christian church during a trip to Rome and the Vatican. Abdul-Rehman Malik travels with the group as they visit some of the Catholic world's most important sites and meet ordinary and not-so-ordinary Catholics. How will they respond to attending mass for the first time, and to the majesty and vastness of St Peter's Basilica? What will they make of their meeting with a lively and enthusiastic cloistered nun, or the infectious passion for astronomy displayed by the director of the Vatican Observatory, Br Guy Consolmagno? And, will all that pale into insignificance on the last day, when they come face to face with Pope Francis? (BBC)

Revisited: 2-The South

span style="line-

height:15.6px"> /span>When President Obama stepped into the White House back in 2008, many hoped his mixed heritage would help unite the country, but, 8 years on, America has never appeared more polarized. The BBC drives across the United States to find out why Americans seem more divided than ever. For the second programme of this series Chloe Hadjimatheou retraces a journey she took before Obama's election, travelling across the southern states, from Dallas to Nashville. She comes across a gay community under attack, unfettered poverty in trailer parks, the last abortion clinic in Missouri and convicted murderers. Why do liberal and conservative, black and white, religious and secular Americans harbour so much animosity towards one another? (2 of 4, BBC)
